(54) Title: A METHOD AND A COMPUTER SYSTEM FOR CONFIGURING A SET OF OBJECTS

(57) Abstract

The invention relates to a method of configuring a set of object values in a computer, at least one object value of said set of object values being user-chosen from a number of object values, each object having at least one possible object value, each object value being determined or undetermined, each of said determined object values being assigned to a value, some of these or all of these object values being comprised in the said set of object values, and said object values being constrained by a rule base defining a number of relationships between the objects or the object values. The method further comprises at least one interruptible algorithm adapted to deduce knowledge about the undetermined object values, said knowledge indicating whether a user selection of a part of or all of the individual undetermined object values are possible or not, said algorithm or algorithms comprising at least one readout point, in at least one readout point storing the deduced knowledge in at least one dynamic representation of object values, the deduced knowledge in each readout point representing partial knowledge about the undetermined objects, said partial knowledge being presented to the user in response to a user interrupt or a time interrupt. The invention thus improves the interactive performance of configuration, as information of knowledge can be gradually extracted.
