(54) Title: PORTAL CONFIGURATION IN WIRELESS MEDIUM

(57) Abstract: A method and system are provided to extend communications from a wireless device. Information specific to a wireless device is received under a first communication, from a network such as the Internet. The information is stored. A communication from the wireless device is received under a second communication protocol, such as a wireless access protocol. The communication includes an identification and a request to access a network site on the first network. The communication is configured for the wireless device using the stored information so that the wireless device can access the network site.
