UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

GRACE PFEIL, OF CHICAGO, ILLINOIS.

SANITARY PROTECTOR.

1,067,841.

Specification of Letters Patent.

Patented July 22, 1913.

Application filed July 5, 1912. Serial No. 707,897.

To all whom it may concern:-

Be it known that I, GRACE PFEIL, a citizen of the United States, residing at Chicago, in the county of Cook and the State of Illinois, have invented certain new and useful Improvements in Sanitary Protectors, of which the following is a specification.

The object of this invention is to provide a sanitary protector for women's use that will take the place of drawers and belt, combined with a pocket and napkin, the protector being supported around the groins of the user, and having a detachable front section that can be folded back in order that the demands of nature may be complied with.

In the accompanying drawings, Figure 1 is an outstretched inside view of the protector. Fig. 2 is a similar view in which the pad and cotton are removed. Fig. 3 is a section on the line a-a of Fig. 1. Fig. 4 shows the application of my protector to the body of a user.

The main portion 1 of the protector is of fabric, having outstanding sides to which are sewed the adjustable elastic stocking supports 2. At the termination of the V-shaped portion 3, is fastened the strip 4 which is adapted to engage in the adjustable fastener 5, said fastener being loosely mounted on the belt 6, which is sewed to the portion of the protector that circles the waist, and has an elastic insert 7. The lower portion of 1 is lined with the rubberized piece 8, onto which is sewed the pocket portion, also of a rubberized material. This pocket portion is made up of an upper and lower piece 9 and 10, the upper piece 9 having a suitable elongated opening 11 for inserting absorbent cotton or whatever material necessary, upper piece 9 having two slots 12 and 13 parallel to the edge 14, which is loose from the lower member 10 at its central portion as is shown more clearly in Fig. 2 and at the opposite extremity of the pocket both the upper and lower pieces 9 and 10 are slotted as at 15, parallel to the slots 9 and 10.

Covering the pocket opening 11 is a napkin 16, which is made of a strip of double fabric having both ends narrowed, and which is applied by inserting one end under the loose portion 14, through the slot 13, the other end being brought over the piece 9 and slipped through both slots 12 and 13. The two ends of the napkin 17 are then held together and inserted in the slot 15, pulled through said slot, then carried over the pieces 9 and 10 lying between the slot 15 and the edge, and tucked under the edge of slot 15, thus forming a suitable fastening as is clearly shown in Fig. 3.

It will be readily seen that should the napkin become in any way saturated, the cotton would absorb the surplus moisture, which would be also prevented from spreading and soiling the clothing by the rubberized material of which the protector is made up.

What I claim as new and wish to secure by Letters Patent is:

1. A sanitary protector comprising drawers, a belt, a pocket comprising an upper and lower member, the upper member having an elongated opening, a napkin overlying the pocket, and means by which the protector may be adjusted to provide for the needs of the user.

2. A sanitary protector comprising drawers, a belt, a pocket, a napkin overlying the pocket, and slots in said pocket to provide suitable fastening for the napkin.

3. A sanitary protector comprising drawers, a belt, a pocket comprising an upper and lower member, the upper member having an elongated opening, a napkin overlying the pocket, slots in upper and lower members suitable to provide fastening for the napkin, and means by which the protector may be adjusted to provide for the needs of the user.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand in presence of two subscribing witnesses.

GRACE PFEIL.
