UNITED STATES PATENT OFFICE.

ALBERT L. PARCELLE, OF ONEONTA, NEW YORK.

IMPROVEMENT IN SAD-IRONS.

Specification forming part of Letters Patent No. 170,763, dated December 7, 1875; application filed August 14, 1875.

To all whom it may concern:

Be it known that I, ALBERT N. PARCELLE, of Oneonta, in the county of Otsego and State of New York, have invented a new and Improved Sad-Iron, of which the following is a specification:

The invention will first be described in connection with the drawing, and then pointed out in the claim.

Similar letters of reference indicate corresponding parts.

A is the back of the sad-iron, in which I make eyes B, in any suitable way, for the connection of the handle C, detachably, by hooked standards D E. In this case I have provided two rigid heel-standards, D, and one jointed toe-standard, E, with a binding-cam, F, to the latter to fasten the hook in the eye. G is the spring-guard for the protection of the hand from the heat, which I fasten at the rear end to the standards D in any way, and connect to the front standard below the pivot-joint, adjusting it so that it is contracted, when the standard is fastened by the cam, sufficiently to cause the hook of the standard to be thrown out of the eye instantly when the cam releases the hook, thus saving the necessity of disconnecting the hook by hand.

I am aware that adjustable handles for sad-irons are not new, and desire only to protect my particular combination; hence,

What I claim is—

The combination, with the handle C, of rigid hook-standards D, standard E, a cam, F, pivoted to the upper end of the latter, and the spring G between the two standards, as shown and described.

ALBERT L. PARCELLE.
